

H. C. Vogt has made some very extensive improvements in his fine department store in Tinley Park. The basement has been entirely remodeled and the hardware department will be housed in new quarters while the grocery and dry goods departments will occupy enlarged modern quarters on the main floor.

Mr. Vogt is planning to hold a gigantic remodeling sale, beginning the latter part of next week. Watch for further announcements.

The GARDEN MURDER CASE

CHAPTER XI—Continued

Vance jumped down and turned to us.

"Frightfully sorry," he said. "Height does affect most people. I didn't realize." He looked at the girl. "Will you forgive me?"

As he spoke Floyd Garden stepped out on the roof through the passageway door.

"Sorry, Vance," he apologized, "but Doc Siefert wants Miss Beeton downstairs—if she feels equal to it. The mater is putting on one of her acts."

The nurse hurried away immediately, and Garden strolled up to Vance. He was again fussing with his pipe.

"A beastly mess," he mumbled. "And you've certainly put the fear of God and destruction into the hearts of the pious boys and girls here this afternoon. They all got the jitters after you talked with them." He looked up. "The fact is, Vance, if you should want to see Kroon or Zalia Graem or Madge Weatherby for any reason this evening, they'll be here. They've all asked to come. Must return to the scene of the crime, or something of that kind. Need mutual support."

"Perfectly natural. Quite," Vance nodded. "I understand their feelings. . . . Beastly mess, as you say. . . . And now suppose we go down."

Doctor Siefert met us at the foot of the stairs.

"I was just coming up for you, Mr. Vance. Mrs. Garden insists on seeing you gentlemen." Then he added in a low tone: "She's in a tantrum. A bit hysterical. Don't take anything she may say too seriously."

We entered the bedroom. Mrs. Garden, in a salmon-pink silk dressing gown, was in bed, bolstered up by a collection of pillows. Her face was drawn and, in the slanting rays of the night-light, seemed flabby and unhealthy. Her eyes glared demoniacally as she looked at us, and her fingers clutched nervously at the quilt. Miss Beeton stood at the far side of the bed, looking down at her patient with calm concern; and Professor Garden leaned heavily against the window-sill opposite, his face a mask of troubled solicitude.

"I have something to say, and I want you all to hear it," Mrs. Garden's voice was shrill and strident. "My nephew has been killed to-day—and I know who did it!" She glared venomously at Floyd Garden who stood near the foot of the bed, his pipe hanging limply from the corner of his mouth. "You did it!"

She pointed an accusing finger at her son. "You've always hated Woody. You've been jealous of him. No one else had any reason to do this despicable thing. I suppose I should lie for you and shield you. But to what end? So you could kill somebody else? You killed Woody. And I know you killed him. And I know why you did it. . . ."

Floyd Garden stood through this tirade without moving and without perceptible emotion.

"And why did I do it, mater?" "Because you were jealous of him. Because you knew that I had divided my estate equally between you two—and you want it all for yourself. You always resented the fact that I loved Woody as well as you. And now you think that by having got Woody out of the way, you'll get everything when I die. But you're mistaken. You'll get nothing! Do you hear me? Nothing! Tomorrow I'm going to change my will. Woody's share will go to your father, with the stipulation that you will never get or inherit a dollar of it. And your share will go to charity." She laughed hysterically and beat the bed with her clenched fists.

Doctor Siefert had been watching the woman closely. He now moved a little nearer the bed.

"An ice-pack, immediately," he said to the nurse; and she went quickly from the room. Then he busied himself with his medicine case and deftly prepared a hypodermic injection.

The woman relaxed under his patient dictatorial scrutiny and permitted him to give her the injection. She lay back on the pillows, staring blankly at her son. The nurse returned to the room and arranged the ice-bag for her patient.

Doctor Siefert then quickly made out a prescription and turned to Miss Beeton.

"Have this filled at once. A teaspoonful every two hours until Mrs. Garden falls asleep."

Floyd Garden stepped forward and took the prescription.

"I'll phone the pharmacy," he said. "It'll take them only a few minutes to send it over." And he went out of the room.

As we passed the den door, we could hear Floyd Garden telephoning.

"I think Mrs. Garden will quiet down now," Doctor Siefert remarked to Vance when we reached the drawing-room. "As I told you, you mustn't take her remarks seriously when she's in this condition. She will probably have forgotten about it by tomorrow."

"Her bitterness, however, did not seem entirely devoid of rationality," Vance returned.

Siefert frowned but made no comment on Vance's statement. Instead he said in his quiet well-modulated voice, as he sat down leisurely in the nearest chair: "This whole affair is very shocking. Floyd Garden gave me but a few details when I arrived. Would you care to enlighten me further?"

Vance readily complied. He briefly went over the entire case, beginning with the anonymous telephone message he had received the night before. (Not by the slightest sign did the doctor indicate any previous knowledge of that telephone call. He sat looking at Vance with serene attentiveness, like a specialist listening to the case history of a patient.) Vance withheld no important detail from him.

"And the rest," Vance concluded, "you yourself have witnessed."

Siefert nodded very slowly two or three times.

"A very serious situation," he commented gravely, as if making a diagnosis. "Some of the things you have told me seem highly significant. A shrewdly conceived murder—and a vicious one. Especially the hiding of the revolver in Miss Beeton's coat and the attempt on her life with the bromin gas in the vault."

"I seriously doubt," said Vance, "that the revolver was put in Miss Beeton's coat pocket with any intention of incriminating her. I imagine it was to have been taken out of the house at the first opportunity. But I agree with you that the bromin episode is highly mysterious." Vance, without appearing to do so, was watching the doctor closely. "When you asked to see me on your arrival here this afternoon," he went on, "I was hoping that you might have some suggestion which, coming from one who is familiar with the domestic situation here, might put us on the track to a solution."

"I Called the Sergeant Just After I Phoned You."

Siefert solemnly shook his head several times.

"No, no. I am sorry, but I am completely at a loss myself. When I asked to speak to you and Mr. Markham it was because I was naturally deeply interested in the situation here and anxious to hear what you might have to say about it."

He paused, shifted slightly in his chair, and then asked: "Have you formed any opinion from what you have been able to learn?"

"Yes, Oh, yes. Frankly, however, I detest my opinion. I'd hate to be right about it. A sinister, unnatural conclusion is forcing itself upon me. It's sheer horror." He spoke with unwonted intensity.

Siefert was silent, and Vance turned to him again.

"I say, doctor, are you particularly worried about Mrs. Garden's condition?"

A cloud overspread Siefert's countenance, and he did not answer at once.

"It's a queer case," he said at length, with an obvious attempt at evasion. "As I recently told you, it has me deeply puzzled. I'm bringing Kattelbaum up tomorrow."

"Yes. As you say. Kattelbaum," Vance looked at the doctor dreamily. "My anonymous telephone message last night mentioned radioactive sodium. But equanimity is essential. Yes. By all means. Not a nice case, doctor—not at all a nice case. . . . And now I think we'll be toddlin'." Vance rose and Siefert also got up.

"If there is anything whatever that I can do for you. . . ." he began.

"We may call on you later," Vance returned, and walked toward the archway.

Siefert did not follow us, but turned and moved slowly toward one of the front windows, where he stood looking out, with his hands clasped behind him. We re-entered the hallway and found Siefert waiting to help us with our coats.

We had just reached the door leading out of the apartment when the strident tones of Mrs. Garden's voice assailed us again. Floyd Garden was in the bedroom, leaning over his mother.

"Your solicitude won't do you any good, Floyd," Mrs. Garden cried. "Being kind to me now, are you? Telephoning for the prescription—all attention and loving kindness. But don't think you're pulling the wool over my eyes. It won't make any difference. Tomorrow I change my will! Tomorrow . . ."

We continued on our way out, and heard no more.

Shortly after nine o'clock the next morning there was a telephone call from Doctor Siefert. Vance was still absent when the telephone rang, and I answered it. The doctor's voice was urgent and troubled when he asked that I summon Vance immediately. Vance slipped into his Chinese robe and sandals and went into the anteroom.

It was nearly ten minutes before he came out again.

"Mrs. Garden was found dead in her bed this morning," he drawled. "Poison of some kind. I've phoned Markham, and we'll be going to the Garden apartment as soon as he comes. A bad business, Van—very bad."

Markham arrived within half an hour. In the meantime Vance had dressed and was finishing his second cup of coffee.

"What's the trouble now?" Markham demanded irritably, as he came into the library. "Perhaps now that I'm here, you'll be good enough to forego your cryptic air."

Vance looked up and sighed. "Do sit down and have a cup of coffee while I enjoy this cigarette. Really, y'know, it's deuced hard to be lucid on the telephone." He poured a cup of coffee, and Markham reluctantly sat down. "And please don't sweeten the coffee," Vance went on. "It has a delightfully subtle bouquet, and it would be a pity to spoil it with saccharine."

Markham, frowning defiantly, put three lumps of sugar in the cup.

"Why am I here?" he growled.

Vance drew deeply on his cigarette and settled back lazily in his chair. "Siefert phoned me this morning, just before I called you. Explained he didn't know your private number at home and asked me to apologize to you for not notifying you direct."

"Notifying me?" Markham set down his cup.

"About Mrs. Garden. She's dead. Found so this morning in bed. Probably murdered."

"Good God!"

"Yes, quite. Not a nice situation. No. The lady died some time during the night—exact hour unknown as yet. Siefert says it might have been caused by an overdose of the sleeping medicine he prescribed for her. It's all gone. And he says there was enough of it to do the trick. On the other hand, he admits it might have been something else."

CHAPTER XII

Markham pushed his cup aside with a clatter and lighted a cigar. "Where's Siefert now?" he asked.

"At the Gardens'. Very correct. Standing by, and all that. The nurse phoned him shortly after eight this morning—it was she who made the discovery when she took Mrs. Garden's breakfast in. Siefert hastened over and after viewing the remains and probing round a bit called me. Said that, in view of yesterday's events, he didn't wish to go ahead until we got there."

"Well, why don't we get along?" snapped Markham, standing up.

Vance sighed and rose slowly from his chair.

"There's really no rush. The lady can't elude us. And Siefert won't desert the ship."

"Hahn'd we better notify Heath?" suggested Markham.

"Yes—quite," returned Vance, as we went out. "I called the sergeant just after I phoned you. He's been up half the night working on the usual police routine. Stout fella, Heath. Amazin' industry. But quite futile."

Miss Beeton admitted us to the Garden apartment. She looked drawn and worried, but she gave Vance a faint smile of greeting which he returned.

"I'm beginning to think this nightmare will never end, Mr. Vance," she said.

Vance nodded somberly, and we went on into the drawing-room where Doctor Siefert, Professor Garden, and his son were awaiting us.

"I'm glad you've come, gentlemen," Siefert greeted us, coming forward.

Professor Garden sat at one end of the long davenport, his elbows resting on his knees, his face in his hands. He barely acknowledged our presence. Floyd Garden got to his feet and nodded abstractedly in our direction. A terrible change seemed to have come over him. He looked years older than when we had left him the night before.

"What a hell of a situation!" he mumbled, focusing watery eyes on Vance. "The mater accuses me last night of putting Woody out of the way, and then threatens to cut me off in her will. And now she's dead! And it was I who took charge of the prescription. The doc says it could have been the medicine that killed her."

Vance looked at the man sharply. "Yes, yes," he said in a low, sympathetic tone. "I thought of all that, too, don't y' know. But it certainly won't help you to be morbid about it."

UNCOMMON AMERICANS

Founder of the Chautauqua

THERE was a time when the chautauqua was "next only to the public school system in bringing to the masses of people some share of their inheritance in the world's great creations in art and literature." It was literally the "university of the people" and it was the creation of a man who did not himself have a college education.

He was John Heyl Vincent, born in Alabama in 1832 of a line of Pennsylvanians who moved back to that state soon after John was born. Educated at Wesleyan institute in Newark, N. J., he began to preach at the age of eighteen and later was ordained into the Methodist ministry. Transferred to the Rock River, Ill., conference in 1857 he became the pastor of a church at Galena, Ill., where one of his parishioners was a quiet little ex-captain of the army named Ulysses S. Grant.

After a trip to the old world Vincent was elected general agent of the Methodist Episcopal Sunday School Union in 1866 and two years later corresponding secretary of the Sunday School Union and Tract Society in New York. In these offices he did more than any other man to shape the International Uniform Sunday School Lesson system.

In 1874 Vincent and Lewis Miller founded a summer assembly at Chautauqua Lake, N. Y., for the training of Sunday school teachers and in 1878 the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle was instituted, providing a system of popular education through home reading and study. The next year the first of the summer schools was organized and these developed rapidly.

In speaking of his work at Chautauqua Bishop Vincent said, "I do not expect to make a second Harvard or Yale out of Chautauqua, but I do want to give the people of this generation such a taste of what it is to be intelligent that they will see to it that their children have the best education the country can give."

How well he succeeded in doing that is shown by the extension of the idea—to the summer schools of colleges and universities, the summer assemblies, conferences and training schools of the various religious and secular organizations and the summer courses of lectures and entertainments which made the word "Chautauqua" a common noun. It is also shown by the declaration of Theodore Roosevelt that "Chautauqua is the most American thing in America."

Camera Man

WITH telephoto lens to aid them in getting long distance "shots" and high-speed film to record the scene even when the light is poor, it's not so difficult for the camera man of today to "cover" a modern war. But it was very different when the first camera man who ever "covered" a war went into the field to do his job.

His name was Mathew Brady, the son of Irish immigrants to New York state, who was engaged in the trade of making jewel and instrument cases when he became interested in the art of daguerreotypy soon after it was introduced into this country in 1839. The man who brought it here was Samuel Finley Breese Morse, a painter, (later famous as the inventor of the telegraph).

Brady learned his first lessons from Morse and learned them so well that by 1853 he was this nation's outstanding photographer.

When the War Between the States opened he was both famous and wealthy and he could have lived a life of ease on his income. Instead he chose a career of privation and danger on the battlefields.

Brady fitted up a canvas-covered wagon to carry his equipment and to serve as his dark room in the field. In it he had to make his own emulsion to coat the large glass plates that were his negatives, for the convenient film roll had not yet been thought of.

His wagon became a familiar sight to all the armies. It plowed through muddy roads, it was ferried over rivers in constant danger of being dumped overboard and all his precious equipment lost.

But fortunately for posterity Brady came safely through all these dangers and the United States government now owns a collection of his negatives, which are priceless records of one of the greatest tragedies in our history. It is also the symbol of a tragic career. After the war was over Brady found himself in financial difficulties. His negatives were sold to pay a storage bill and in 1874 the government acquired them by paying the charges of $2,840. Brady did not benefit by the deal but later—much later—the government did give him $25,000 for the collection which was then valued at $150,000. In his later years Brady lost his pre-eminence as a photographer and he died in comparative poverty and obscurity in 1896.

Murmurings of Spring

"IF YOU'D take a few steps, Sis, I believe I'd be inspired to answer that question, 'Did you ever see a dream walking?' You are nothing less than devastating—truly a menace!"

"You meow so sweetly, Connie. I'm a bit suspicious that this little peplum frock of mine has got you catty. Your eyes really aren't green by rights, you know."

Connie Sews Her Own.

"How could you? I think my dress looks as nice on me as yours does on you. Why practically all of the girls at the La-fa-Lot last night wanted to know where I found such a lovely frock. Not one of them guessed that I made it myself. And did I feel elegant when I played Mendelssohn's Spring Song on Diane's new baby grand! The girls said I fit into the picture perfectly. I thought if only Dwight could see me now."

"I still say my two-piece with its piped peplum, cute little buttons and stream-lines is the No. 1 spring outfit in this woman's town."

Mother Happens Along.

"Girls, girls, if your talk were only half as pretty as your frocks you'd be better off. Sometimes I wonder if you wouldn't be more appropriately titled The Cheek Twins, rather than The Chic Twins."

"Okay, Mother, you win. Let's change the subject by changing clothes. We'll put on our culottes and join you in a round of golf, how's that? Gee, Mother, you never look sweeter than when you're wearing a casual young two-piece shirt dress. The plaid pique is just the thing for you, too. In fact, Mom, you're just about tops from any angle."

The Patterns.

Not to Be Regarded Lightly

When we give a promise we consider it a small outlay, but often large demands are made upon it.

The wasp makes no honey, but it is quite as busy as the bee. The bee, you see, understood how to get the praise and poetry of man.

When temptation refuses to pursue you, it knows you don't care much for it, anyway.

We like traditions if they are picturesque.

Unfitness of Things

Shoes that are too small do not deceive the observant.

Civilization is self-control. Self-expression, as interpreted, is merely "letting yourself go" and making a mess for yourself and everybody else.

To be "up and doing" is interesting, no doubt important; but, goodness, are we never to cultivate repose—and do a little thinking?

When we begin to doubt the eternal infallibility of "public opinion," the country is safe. Thought is moving forward.

Don't Irritate Gas Bloating

If you want to really GET RID OF GAS and terrible bloating, don't expect to do it by just doctoring your stomach with harsh, irritating alkalies and "gas tablets." Most GAS is lodged in the stomach and upper intestine and is due to old poisonous matter in the constipated bowels that are loaded with ill-causing bacteria.

If your constipation is of long standing, enormous quantities of dangerous bacteria accumulate. Then your digestion is upset. GAS often presses heart and lungs, making life miserable. You can't eat or sleep. Your head aches. Your back aches. Your complexion is sallow and pimply. Your breath is foul. You are a sick, grouchy, wretched, unhappy person. YOUR SYSTEM IS POISONED.

Thousands of sufferers have found in Adlerika the quick, scientific way to rid their systems of harmful bacteria. Adlerika rids you of gas and cleanses foul poisons out of BOTH upper and lower bowels. Give your bowels a REAL cleansing with Adlerika. Get rid of GAS. Adlerika does not gripe—is not habit forming. At all Leading Druggists.

Helping Others

What do we live for, if it is not to make life less difficult for each other?

ARE YOU WEAK?

MRS. Jaunita Naron of 620 E. Grand Ave., Decatur, Ill., said: "Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is excellent to relieve a weak, tired-out feeling, also headache, associated with functional disturbances. It is a splendid tonic. It increases the appetite—is not habit forming. At all Leading Druggists."

Be Careful—First Rule

No one has a right of way when a life is at stake.

HELP KIDNEYS

To Get Rid of Acid and Poisonous Waste

Your kidneys help to keep you well by constantly filtering waste matter from the blood. If your kidneys get functionally disordered and fail to remove excess impurities, there may be poisoning of the whole system and body-wide distress.

Burning, scanty or too frequent urination may be a warning of some kidney or bladder disturbance.

You may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feel weak, nervous, all played out.

In such cases it is better to rely on a medicine that has won country-wide acclaim than on something less favorably known. Use Doan's Pills. A multitude of grateful people recommend Doan's. Ask your neighbor!

Lesson for April 25

THE OBEDIENCE OF NOAH

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 8:20-22; 9:8-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—By faith Noah, being warned of God concerning things not seen as yet, moved with godly fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, Heb. 11:7.
PRIMARY TOPIC—The Meaning of the Rainbow.
JUNIOR TOPIC—The Rainbow's Message.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Following God's Plan.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Deliverance through Obedience.

The "book of beginnings" (Genesis) has already brought before us the creation of the world, the origin of man, the entrance of sin into the world, and God's judgment upon that sin. In chapter 4 we find the first murder. Cain, who brought an offering before God which was not acceptable, murdered his brother Abel, whose offering pleased God. Strange it is that man has it in his heart to hate those who expose his sin by their godly life. God does not leave himself without a witness in the earth. The God-fearing line of Seth appears. There are always those who have not bowed the knee to the Adversary. Consider the astonishment of Soviet officials at the deep-seated and wide-spread faith in God revealed in their recent census.

But sin again lifts its ugly head and ere long God is driven to the necessity of judgment upon mankind. Read the terrific indictment of humanity in Genesis 6:5-7. It is still true that the heart of man apart from God's grace is "desperately wicked" (Jer. 17:9). Well does a contemporary writer say that even modern "psychology has unveiled the dismal and sinister depths in human nature. Man can no longer flee from reality into the romantic refuge of his own heart; for the human heart has become a house of horrors in whose murky recesses man cannot erect for his solace either a shrine or a citadel. Man is bad; he is a sinner. The depths of his meanness are being unveiled in a ghastly way in individual and social life in these times. What a contemporary ring there is about these old biblical judgments on mankind! (Gen. 6:5, 6; Isa. 1:6.) What a tremendous arraignment of sinful human nature is Paul's prologue in Romans 1" (Mackay).

So God sent a flood upon the earth. It used to be fashionable to doubt the story of the flood, but archaeology has joined hands with geology and history to agree with Scripture. The facts are available; let us use them.

"But Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord" and prepared an ark at God's command. Here again it can be demonstrated that the ark was sufficiently large to meet the need of Noah and all his family, with the animals and their food, and with room to spare. It is significant that the proportions of the ark were those of a well-planned boat. God knows how to build, and man does well to obey his instructions.

The rain came, the fountains of the deep were opened, and all the living perished, except those within the ark. What an instructive type of our safety in Christ is the ark!

But our lesson concerns primarily what occurred after Noah came forth from the ark and presented himself before God.

I. An Obedient Man (8:20-22).
To come before God with acceptable worship, man must come with clean hands. The question is not whether he is brilliant, learned, or of high position. The one thing that counts is obedience. When such a man offers the worship of his heart before God, it goes up to him like a sweet savor.

II. A Covenant-Keeping God (9:8-17).
The beautiful rainbow in the cloud became a token of God's promise, and the visible assurance to "all flesh" that the judgment of the flood will not be repeated. Never again will seed time and harvest, nor any of the orderly processes of nature, fail throughout the whole earth.

What a gracious God we have! And what a pity that men presume upon his goodness. Because he "maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. 5:45), men not only forget that he is the giver of all things, but assume that they may sin against him with impunity. Let us remind them that it is the clear teaching of Scripture that "every one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14:12).

Well Spent Days
Oh, what a glory doth this world put on, for him who with a fervent heart goes forth under the bright and glorious sky, and looks on duties well performed, and days well spent.—Longfellow.

Purity of Heart
A holy life is the very gate of heaven; but let us always remember that holiness does not consist in doing uncommon things, but in doing everything with purity of heart.—Cardinal Manning.

Mokena Farm Bureau Signs Improvement Asso.

The Mokena Farm Bureau Community Unit is making outstanding progress in the field of Dairy Herd Improvement by signing a complete improvement association within the confines of its own community. This is the first time in the history of the county that such an association has been organized in so small an area.
Twenty-six members have signed contracts in this association, none of whom live more than eight miles from Mokena in any direction and the average distance for the entire group is something less than four miles.

Most of the preliminary work and much of the solicitation of members was done with a group of dairymen within the community. Conrad Bor-met, Marion Owen, A. C. Geuther, Herman Barlewort, Frank Sayers,
John Schilling, Wilh. Finhold, Herman Boromet and others took part in the organization of this association.
Chas. Erickson and Joe Kohl, officers of the Mokena Local of the Pure Milk Association, assisted the program by making available to the committee all records necessary and by other means at their command.

Prof. C. S. Rhodes, dairy extension specialist from the University of Illinois held a meeting Friday April 9 which started the assistance of the Farm Adviser, carried on the final stages of the campaign when the last of the 26 members signed the agreement to co-operate on this improvement project.

The following men make up the list of those who have entered their herds for this testing work: Conrad Boromet, Arthur Geuther, Herman
Barlewort, Wilhelm Finhold, Marion
Owen, John Schilling, Frank Sayers,
Chas. Erickson, Ervin Marti, Wm.
Barnhardt, Milton Holstein, Arthur
Mark, Paul Christiansen, Geo. Keuck
Geo. Mager, Mrs. Louis Ebert, Louis
Lauffer, Lawrence Kohl, Geo. Abbe,
Joe Kohl, Emil Johnson, Joe Scott,
Al. Schilling, Wm. Hanson, Andrew
Schroth and Marti and Krusemark.

The next step in the development of this project will be an organization meeting held in Mokena, as soon as possible to secure Prof.
Rhode from the University. This meeting will be held before the first of May, as it is expected that the testing will start on that date. Five men, John Schilling, Ervin Marti, Frank Sayers, Chas. Erickson and Al Schilling, are testing now in the
No. 2 association in Will county, but will be transferred to this association and other men secured to take their places.

It is hoped that out of this new association will grow an increased interest in improving our dairy herds not only thru the increased efficiency in feeding and culling but in the more longtime phases of increasing the breeding practices by which these herds are developed. It is hoped that from the records these dairymen will be able to discover their good foundation cows from which their best young stock should be developed and that all sires used in the association may be proved as to their value within the space of a very few years.

This move of the Mokena dairymen can very easily be the most significant step they have taken to reduce their cost of production and put their entire business on a more sound financial basis than anything else that has been done within recent years.

More Taxes— Or Less Spending?

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman
Sentinels of the Republic

News dispatches from Washington report that growing numbers of Congressmen, largely from the agricultural districts, are announcing their determination to stem the tide of rising taxes.

From the same source come reports of mounting living costs.

Probably the one statement explains the other. For, as the protesting Congressmen realize, high cost of government and high cost of living are indissolubly linked. They rise or fall together. And both levy their heavy toll at the same source—the income and savings of the American worker and earner.

How can that toll be reduced?

Advocates of a lighter burden of taxation offer the obvious answer: "Reduce government expenditures." Backed by official statistics, they point out that even though more tax money is pouring into the Federal coffers than in earlier years, outgo still exceeds income.

Cut the outgo, they insist, and taxes will not have to be increased. They may even be lessened, thus hastening the progress of recovery and widespread re-employment.

The American people are doing their part by paying taxes which, directly or indirectly, cut deeply into every worker's pay envelope and every housewife's budget.

It is not too much to ask that their representatives at Washington do their part, too, by eliminating unnecessary extravagance—even though political jobholders and political futures be endangered in the process.

There seems, in fact, no other choice.
As a member of the Senate Finance Committee recently reminded his colleagues:

"It will be imperative that we impose heavier taxes if we do not cut down expenditures."

Like the Senator, the workers and earners of America know from bitter experience on whom those taxes will fall.

planned for the five Sundays during the month of May. May our own folks come to get a realization of what is before us and the great opportunity that is being offered us for the spreading of the influence of the church in our community. The first Sunday of May will be "Roll Call" Sunday at which service we hope to have every member, friend, and those affiliated with our organizations present. At that service Mr.
L. E. Pierce, a young Chicago attorney will occupy the pulpit. That evening a group of men from a Chicago Baptist church will conduct the entire service beginning at 7:30 o'- clock. And these services are only the beginning of a great series that will include such services as Mother's Day, Pentecost, Memorial Day etc.; and such outside attractions as The Aurora College A cappella choir,
Rev. Harold Kendrick Taylor of St.
Stephens Methodist church of Chicago and Rev. Ray Honeywell of the

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Doctrine of Atonement" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, April 18.

The Golden Text was, "John seeth
Jesus coming unto him, and saith, Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1:29).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy lovingkindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me. . . .
For thou desirest not sacrifice; else would I give it: thou delightest not in burnt offering" (Psalms 51:1, 2, 10, 16).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy:
"Sorrow for wrongdoing is but one step towards reform and the very easiest step. The next and great step required by wisdom is the test of our sincerity,—namely, reformation" (p. 5).

God, be your Comfort, your Guide and your Strength. It does not matter how you feel, the Word is always the same. "God is Faithful."

The enemy may try to make things appear very dark to you, in bringing doubts and fears, BUT ALL THE ENEMY CAN BRING, DOES NOT CHANGE THE WORD OF GOD. After you and I have passed into eter-

HOMER

(These items were received too late for publication last week.)

Chief Ho-To-Pi, Indiana tenor singer presented a concert Sunday night April 18 in the Joliet high school under the auspices of the Will County Union of the Kings Daughters and Sons. The chief's program consisted of songs and folklore of the red man. However, he has a repertoire of more than 500 songs in seven languages and 18 operas. Mrs. Fred Paddock president of the Way-side Workers Circle of Kings Daughters sold tickets locally.

Miss Lucille Schwaab spent the week end with relatives in Lemont.

Mrs. Walter Haley was a visitor in Chicago Monday.

Around The Town

Things look pretty serious between A. W. and H. S., any day now. We hear Tiny, rode out to the meeting last Monday night in a V-8. Looks like A. O. refuses to give G. V. a break.

Believe it or not, but Hopkins, as well as E. M. has turned Walter Winchell style; only its supposed to be kept a secret.

Who's the handsome Romeo from the Northeast end of Joliet that followed L. W. home from Joliet last Monday night?

Baseball practice doesn't mean a thing to F. S. when his gal friend is around.

We hear that the Bob and Corrine romance landed on the rocks.

A reader claims he saw Don Sievert out with his old gal friend last week one nite. An old romance flaring up again?

Milton must be in love. We've been told he's lost all old habits—and given up most every thing for her.

R. D. appears to have centered his attention on a cute little gal from Joliet.

K. S. seems to be progressing fairly well with W. H.—a friend wants to know if that's what you call love at sight?

E. O. says now that J. L. is on the radio he has a rushing Asporin business.

An interested reader would like to know who Willard Hafka drove home from the show Friday nite?

Seems as tho the White Fence Farm is getting to be quite a popular place to a certain few New Lenox young folks. So we hear—highbrow, lowbrow, intermediate what? Worry about prices? Not when the gal friend will take you.

Those four New Lenox gals who are seen doing a lot of walking down the Spencer road Sunday afternoons better watch out. Gravel roads are hard on shoe leather.

Whoes the shiek about town that gets a kick out of taking pictures? Not you, is it T. H.?

Who was the grand looking Romeo that took R. F. out Monday afternoon? Nice goin' kid, and we'll bet it was nice ridin too.

Red Coral Always Prized

It is red coral that is and always has been prized, not solely for jewelry and buttons, but as a charm to bring safety, health and secrets not revealed to the ordinary person. As ancient Gauls rushed headlong into battle, they trusted their safety to their swords, strength and the "magic" coral imbedded in their shields or helmets. Many Italians and Indians regard coral as protection against the "evil eye." The world's red coral comes from the reefs off the Mediterranean coast of Africa, says the Washington Post, and is obtained chiefly by Italians.

LINCOLN ESTATES

By Mrs. R. M. Fisher

Little Joyce Swatek is on the sick list.

May 15 Is Last Day To Request 1936 Soil Payments

May 15 has been set as the final date on which Will county farmers may submit applications for payment for carrying out soil-conserving and soil-building practices under provisions of the 1936 agricultural conservation program, according to Farm Advisor, Leonard W. Brahm.

"To complete the 1936 program and to forward the remaining payments to farmers as rapidly as possible it has been found necessary to set a dead-line for submitting applications," Mr. Brahm explained. "The establishment of a final date will also promote efficiency in the offices of the state and county committees."

"Any applications submitted after May 15 must meet the requirements of a claim case," Brahm said. "This means that definite and sufficient reason must be given for not having submitted the application before the dead-line date."

While attempting to wind up the 1936 program, officials of the Will county agricultural conservation association are making every effort to acquaint farmers with provisions of the 1937 program and to aid them in adjusting their farming operations to sound soil-conserving and soil-building practices, Mr. Brahm explained.

Outstanding Facts Regarding American Passion Play

The Passion Play as presented by the American Passion Play with Delmar D. Darrah, director of Bloomington, Ill., is a soul stirring, colorful production which must be seen to be fully appreciated.

The following ten facts concerning the Passion Play will show you should see the play this year, this being the 14th annual season of this great religious drama:

1. The American Passion Play is the largest stage production in the world. Nothing like it has been developed on such a stupendous scale. Forty of the sixty-eight scenes require the use of the entire stage.
2. The American Passion Play is the only Passion Play which presents the ministry of Jesus of Nazareth in an adequate and satisfactory manner. Such Passion Plays as have heretofore been brought forth generally commence with the Triumphal Entry into Jerusalem. The American Passion Play commences with The Sermon on the Mount.
3. The American Passion Play presents the miracles of Jesus exactly as they are recorded in the Four Gospels. The interpretation and application of these miracles is left to the auditor.
4. Every scene in The American Passion Play is as correct in detail as exhaustive research is able to determine. The local color of the times, the manners, habits, customs of the people, also their mode of living are correctly portrayed.
5. The American Passion Play lives! So natural is the acting and so painstaking the preparation and direction of the play, that the moment the curtain rises the auditor loses himself and becomes a part of the great multitude that follows Jesus and listens to his teachings.
6. At no time is the personality of the players exploited. Each player is merged into the character that he represents. When Judas Iscariot walks upon the stage, it is not some one representing Judas—it is Judas himself, because the actor, in dress, make up, and manner of expression has submerged his own personality and become the man of Kerioth.
7. The testimony of many thousands who have witnessed The American Passion Play is that it has a soul. The play possesses a quality not found in any similar play, and that quality is deep spirituality. Every person leaving the auditorium after the last curtain is under a tremendous spiritual impulse.
8. The American Passion Play uses music not in a demonstrative way. The music employed is wholly interpretive and is fitted to the special emotion of the scene with which it is used. The music, like the words of the Master, reach deep down in the human heart.
9. The Passion Play is highly educational, because it portrays the life of Jesus of Nazareth—his works, his sufferings, his people under Roman domination—their looking to Jesus as the Messiah, however much they misunderstood his real mission—the political intrigues of the priesthood—are all perfectly developed in order to give a complete understanding of the trials and vicissitudes that beset Jesus of Nazareth in his mission—his passion—and his final death upon the cross.
10. The American Passion Play is not a commercial enterprise—it is not operated for monetary profit. Its whole purpose is to bring to men and women a better understanding of the ethical teachings of Jesus, and to demonstrate that he alone has offered to the world the only plan of life which can possibly lead to peace, happiness, prosperity and moral triumph, not only for individuals but for Nations as well.

See the Play this year, if you possibly can. Read the ad for this Play on another page of this paper.

Mr. and Mrs. John Feurst are the proud parents of a baby daughter, born April 8.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Carroll entertained at dinner Tuesday. The guest list included Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Carroll and son of Russell, Kansas and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Carroll of Kansas.

Mrs. Stephen Hall of Joliet was a guest at the Henry Rodgers home Tuesday.

In the April 9th number of the News-Bulletin we unintentionally omitted some names of out-of-town guests who attended the shower given in honor of Miss Eleanor Carroll and Clarence Weis. The following were also present: Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Kolar, son Walter and daughter Miss Anna Kolar, Miss Evelyn Eichelberger and Arthur Stafford all of Lemont, Mr. and Mrs. Michael Weis and daughter Marion of Westmont, Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Freehoff and daughters Rita and Mary Ann of Plainfield, Little Marion Weis also favored with a tap dance during the evening.

Roland Wilson of Chicago spent Sunday with his grandmother, Mrs. Guy Bump. Roland had the misfortune to catch his finger in the car door and cut it so badly that it was necessary to have a doctor dress it.

Word comes from Chicago Heights that Mr. and Mrs. Earl Lane of Hollbrook are the parents of a son, born Thursday night in St. James hospital in Chicago Heights. Mrs. Lane is the former Gladys Olson.

Mrs. Lillian Longhini, 30 years old passed away at the St. Joseph's hospital in Joliet after a short illness.

She leaves to mourn her loss, her husband, one son and an infant daughter, her parents Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Zeisner, four brothers, Charles, Henry, Edward and William, two sisters, Mrs. Emma Shubert of Oak Forest and Mrs. Ruth Lawrence of Lockport. Funeral services were held from the Clarence Miller funeral home in Lockport, Wednesday afternoon to St. Paul's Lutheran church. Rev. Walter Bezold pastor officiated.

The Woman's Community Club was entertained Wednesday afternoon in the home of Miss Ida Harrington in Lockport. Mrs. Reed Burch was the assisting hostess. Following a fellowship singing, Mrs. Vaheh Seron of Joliet chairman of the cancer committee of Will County gave an interesting and educational talk. After listening to her talk the club voted to take out two memberships to help out in the fight against cancer.

An interesting program was then presented with Mrs. Harry Parker acting as chairman. A book review, "Singing in the Wilderness" was given by Miss Myra Reed, changes in the school law and its local applications was given by Mrs. Helen Rowley. Mrs. Fred Paddock and Mrs. Harvey Meyers gave three minute talks on floors and their coverings. Mrs. Parker gave current events and Miss Margaret Jay favored with vocal selections. Plans for the annual meeting of the Will County organization which will be held in Frankfort, April 27 were discussed. Refreshments were then served by the hostesses.

The May meeting will be held in the home of Mrs. Buelah Reed with Mrs. Guy Bump as assisting hostess. Geo. Bump Sr., who has been spending the winter months with relatives and friends in California and Oregon returned home this week. He reports the weather there was balmy and he enjoyed a delightful winter.

Owen Storm and Miss Margaret Welter were dinner guests in the Will Storm home in De Kalb, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt Burch spent Sunday at Brookfield Zoo.

A number of young people from this vicinity attended the annual conference of the Congregational churches at Naperville, Sunday.

Wait Long for Cremation

It is not unusual for a Dutch family to sell all its property to defray the cost of cremation of the father, to meet the heavy cost in their country. A poor family will scrimp and save for years to provide funds for the ceremonial cremation of a member. Meanwhile, a corpse often reposes in a village graveyard for years waiting the accumulation of the necessary funds. Expense of cremation is sometimes reduced to a minimum by co-operative or mass cremations, at which 50 or 100 bodies are burned in one grand ceremony, and the expense divided pro rata.

1937 Ford V-8

● If you think that "all low-price cars cost about the same" — forget it! They don't.

Ford makes a car — a 60-horsepower economy Ford V-8 — that sells from 30 to 60 dollars under the prices asked for any other car of comparable size. The lowest Ford prices in years!

Check delivered prices in your town and see for yourself.

● Of course, first cost doesn't prove "low cost" — you must consider operating cost also.

The "60" has definitely established itself as the most economical car in Ford history. Ford cars have been famous for economy for 34 years, so that means something!

Owners who have driven it thousands of miles report that the Ford "60" averages between 22 and 27 miles on a gallon of gasoline.

You can prove those figures — on the open road — in a car provided by the nearest Ford dealer.

● When you've finished your personal check-up, ask yourself:

"Do I want to save money the day I buy my car and every mile I drive it?"

"Do I want a safe, roomy, comfortable car of advanced design — created from the finest materials to the highest precision standards?"

There's only one answer, of course — the 1937 Ford V-8.

Ford V-8 $529 at Dearborn Factory. Prices begin at $529. Transportation charges, State and Federal taxes extra.

This price is for the 60-horsepower Coupe equipped with front and rear bumpers, spare tire, horn, windshield wiper, sun visor, glove compartment, and ash tray.

$25 A MONTH, after usual down-payment, buys any Ford V-8 Car, from any Ford dealer, anywhere in the U. S. — through Authorized Ford Finance Plans of Universal Credit Co.

Police of Peoria held Pete Williams, thirty-six, in technical custody at a hospital while they investigated a mysterious shooting in which he was wounded twice.

Approximately 45,000 persons in Cook county will receive old-age assistance, it was announced by Joseph L. Moss, director of the Cook county bureau of public welfare.

The Pure Oil company said that rotary equipment for drilling three new wells on the company's block of 350,000 acres in Clay City will be installed very soon.

Announcement was made that Deere & Co., manufacturers of agricultural implements, had purchased the Velie Motors corporation plant in Moline, which has 600,000 feet of floor space.

Mrs. Jennie Kingsbury, seventy-six years old, wife of George H. Kingsbury, secretary of the Rock Island Merchants' Credit union, died of pneumonia at her home following a week's illness.

William Sonnenburg, sixty-four years old, Park Ridge, was found dead in the garage at his home, overcome by fumes from the motor of his automobile, on which he was working.

Dr. Frank J. Jirka, state director of health, announced plans for the establishment of more than a dozen clinics throughout the state for the treatment of venereal diseases. A federal grant of about $300,000 is available for this purpose and Dr. Jirka hopes that all of the clinics will be operating by July 1.

Jeremiah Lyons of Lake Villa fashioned a noose of a dish towel and hanged himself with it in the Lake county jail at Waukegan. He was awaiting trial on a charge of manslaughter. Lyons fatally shot his close friend, Jack Murrie, also of Lake Villa, on December 1 following a dispute over their respective war records.

For the first time in their history, workers in Wilbur Glenn Voliva's Zion Building Industries are to be unionized—and to receive the union wage scale—it was announced. The announcement came as Verne Corley, former president of the Lake County Trades Union Council, assumed the post of superintendent of the industries, a unit of Zion's inclusive Institutes and Industries.

Georgia, five, and Dick, three, children of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Clark of Mineral, were found in a small building near their home after more than a hundred persons, including the sheriff and state police, had spent the night searching through a sleet and hail storm for them. The children said they had been trapped by closing of a heavy door of the building.

Samuel P. Atkinson, ninety-four years old, former Champaign business man, died following a paralytic stroke. He had been head of the Atkinson Monument company until his retirement ten years ago. During the Civil war he took part in the defense of Washington, in the battles of Harpers Ferry, Martinsburg, North mountain, and Shepherdstown. He was graduated from Portsmouth college in 1866.

David O'Donnell, eighteen, a freshman chemistry student at the University of Illinois, was killed and Rodger Shields, eighteen, also a freshman chemistry student, was injured seriously when a home made bomb with which they were experimenting exploded prematurely. O'Donnell, who lived in Urbana, was the son of Thomas E. O'Donnell, University of Illinois professor of architecture.

Historical characters of Knox college and Galesburg will play parts in the celebration of the school's centenary in June, thanks to a prize offered to campus puppet makers. Puppets fashioned by student craftsmen will depict noted figures in the history of the town and school. The characters created in this contest will appear in a puppet show to be staged in June under the guidance of Prof. William T. Beauchamp of the department of English and Prof. Paul A. Foley of the stagecraft classes.

Six field trips in various parts of the state will be conducted during the summer and fall by the Illinois state geological survey. This will be the eighth annual series of earth history conferences arranged for teachers and others interested in the geology and mineral resources of Illinois. All trips are scheduled for Saturdays. The first trip will be held in the Palos park region near Chicago on May 15 under the leadership of Dr. J. Harlen Bretz of the University of Chicago, outstanding authority on the geology of the Chicago region. The field trips are offered free by the state and anyone interested in natural science is invited to attend.

Patrick H. Burke, seventy years old, Aurora, former general roadmaster of the Burlington railroad, retired on a pension after 55 years with the company. He started as water boy for a section gang at Naperville.

Thomas Griffith, nineteen years old, a member of Wilbur Glenn Voliva's Christian Catholic church in Zion City, confessed that he set the fire which destroyed Voliva's famed Shiloh tabernacle. The boy said he burned the building to get revenge for wrongs he fancied were done his foster parents by Voliva.

Bedtime Story for Children

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

PETER RABBIT'S GLAD SURPRISE.

IT HAD been many days since any of the little people of the Green Forest had seen or heard anything of Mrs. Grouse and all but two or three had made up their minds that Sammy Jay was right and that Farmer Brown's boy really had killed her and eaten her for his dinner. Tommy Tit the Chickadee didn't believe it. Chatterer the Red Squirrel remembered how he had been kept a prisoner and treated ever so kindly by Farmer Brown's boy and he didn't quite believe it.

And Then Mrs. Grouse Walked Out Right in Front of Peter.

Anyway, he had hope that it wasn't so. Peter Rabbit tried not to believe it. But as one day followed another Peter's doubts grew until at last he felt that he almost had to believe it.

Now, all this time Jack Frost had stayed in the Green Forest and on the Green Meadows and kept the icy crust he had made over the snow as hard as ever, which, of course, made it dreadfully hard for the little people who live there and must eat to get enough food. They were hungry most of the time and had to spend every minute that they were awake in hunting for food. Only those who sleep most of the winter didn't mind. But at last Jack

White Birds on Blue

This afternoon frock with an Eton jacket top is made of a widely spaced silk print in navy blue with white birds. The trimming is hand-drawn white handkerchief linen with real binche lace. The hat is navy blue felt with white pique.

Frost grew tired and went away. Just as soon as he left, jolly, bright Mr. Sun saw this and he set to work to melt that hard, icy crust until there wasn't a bit of it left. Then it snowed again, a soft, light fluffy snow that fell in the night.

The next morning Peter Rabbit was hopping through the Green Forest, lipperty-lipperty-tip, when suddenly he saw something that made him give a gasp and sit up very straight. Then he looked and looked, rubbed his eyes to make sure that he was seeing right, and looked again. What was it that he saw? Why it was tracks, queer looking tracks that led straight under a great thick branch of hemlock tree, and they looked, they certainly looked, very much like the snowshoe tracks of Mrs. Grouse.

Peter felt as if he must be dreaming. He stared and stared and stared.

"What's the matter with you, Peter Rabbit? Didn't you ever see my snowshoe tracks before?" asked a voice from under the hemlock tree. And then Mrs. Grouse walked out right in front of Peter.

Peter's big eyes opened wider than ever. "Oh!" he cried. "Is—is it really and truly you, Mrs. Grouse?" he cried.

"Of course, it is me! Who else should it be? Is there anybody else who looks like me in the Green Forest?" he cried.

"No—no," replied Peter slowly, as if even yet he wasn't quite sure, "only Sammy Jay said that you had been killed and eaten by Farmer Brown's boy and—and—"

"And you believed it!" snapped Mrs. Grouse. "I should think that by this time you would have learned never to believe what Sammy Jay says. You ought to know that he's the greatest mischief-maker in the Green Forest. Do I look as if I had been killed and eaten?" Mrs. Grouse ruffled up her feathers and strutted back and forth in front of Peter.

Peter laughed joyously. "Not a bit! Not the least little bit!" he declared. "But where have you been all this time? Do tell me all about it! This is the gladdest surprise I have had for a long time."

Then, Mrs. Grouse told Peter all about how Farmer Brown's boy had taken her home when he found her so weak that she couldn't fly, and had fed her and made her as comfortable as he knew how in the henhouse all the time that the hard, icy crust had lasted in the Green Forest, and then how he had taken her out and let her go and had laughed to see her whirl away into the Green Forest.

Peter listened with his big eyes opened their widest and his long ears standing straight up. "Then Tommy Tit and Chatterer were right, and Farmer Brown's boy isn't half bad!" he cried.

"He isn't bad at all," declared Mrs. Grouse.

First Aid to the Ailing House

—By— Roger B. Whitman

SOUND-PROOFING

UNLESS a house is built to prevent it, sounds will travel through walls and floors to an unpleasant degree. When sound-proofing is wanted, it can best be applied while the house is under construction. In a finished house, sound-proofing is not always possible, because some of the sound is carried through the framework.

An inside wall usually consists of wood studs, to which the plaster or other surfaces are attached on both sides. Some of the sound is carried through by the studs, and more by the vibration of the parts of the walls between the studs. Packing the spaces in the walls with rock wool or other material will cut down some of the sound, but not all of it. For a greater degree of sound-proofing, a second wall can be built on one side of the offending wall. This consists of studs, to be surfaced with stiff insulating boards, or better yet, with lath and a kind of plaster that absorbs sound waves. This wall should be separated from the main wall by an inch at the closest points; there should be no actual contacts between them. The same idea can be used to reduce noise through a ceiling by the building of a false ceiling that is nowhere in contact with the one above.

Noise through a floor can also be deadened from the upper side by laying stiff insulating boards, and placing a new floor on top. Linoleum is more effective as a sound deadener than a new floor of wood.

Sound-proofing a door requires the deadening of the sound that passes through the door itself, and also the packing of the joints all around the door with sound-proofing material, such as thick felt. The door can be covered with a sheet of insulating board. Some makes of these boards are especially treated to absorb sound waves. A sheet should be cut to the size of the door, and attached to it by one-inch strips around the edges. Strips of thick felt can be had, suitable for filling the spaces around a door.

Noise may be carried through a house by the heating and water pipes; the click of a water meter, for instance, or noises from an oil burner or a stoker. These noises can be reduced by bracing the pipes to check vibration and by pipe covering.

The Shoemaker's Last

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

I'VE studied the state of the nation, Considered the case of the poor, And wondered what new legislation Is needed to re-assure.

And here is the step I'd be taking: I think that a law should be passed—

There ought to be some way of making The shoemaker stick to his last.

I'm not one of these view-with-almarmers, But the man I'd get rid of with thanks Knows more about farming than farmers

And more about banking than banks. There ought to be some way of listing A man by his trade in the past, There ought to be some law insisting The shoemaker stick to his last.

There are places for all of us, brother, And matters for straightening out, But not in the place of each other, And things we know nothing about. Depression? Well, one thing will do it,

Will make it a thing of the past: To each have a trade, and go to it, The shoemaker stick to his last.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis © Public Ledger, Inc.

PURPOSE has been called the mainspring of progress. But the Master of our destinies has not decreed that progress should be made by each of us in the same manner. Such is clearly indicated by the variety of forefingers which come under the observation of the analyst of hands.

Each forefinger and its type indicates with amazing clearness the way in which its possessor formulates his or her purposes and puts them into action.

The Scholarly Finger of Jupiter.

The outstanding characteristics of this type are its extremely irregular contour and pronounced inclination toward the second finger. These indicate a high degree of concentration and reflection. While the forefinger of the overcautious type crooks rather than bends toward the second finger, the scholarly type not only bends toward it but almost leans against it throughout its entire length.

When viewed from the back, the scholarly type has a bony wrinkled look that immediately differentiates it from all other types. The nail of this type may vary, on some forefingers being broad and squared, on others long and narrow. In either case, the nail itself is often found to be ribbed in its structure.

When analyzing a hand with this type of forefinger, you may feel safe in placing its owner as a man or woman who has plenty of sound purpose, but one who puts it to work only after careful study and dissection of all facts relating to a worthwhile objective.

WHAT THE CATBIRD KNEW

By CLARISSA MACKIE

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate.
WNU Service.

"WENT away and never has been heard from," asserted Captain Halliday, as he re-filled his pipe and pulled out a battered matchbox. "I always ask folks from the city if they know Robert Landis, but no one ever had up to the time you came to the village."

"It may not be the same person," said Mrs. Bently, as she knitted busily. They were sitting on the bottom of an upturned boat on the shore, and the captain had been relating many stories to the city boarder. "I have met a Robert Landis; he is a young newspaperman, and he lives in the same boarding house that I do in the city. I have often talked with him, but he never mentioned Shellbeach—in fact, he knew I was coming here, but he did not appear to be interested."

"Hum! Is he married?" asked the captain.

"Oh, no."

"Does he seem to like the girls?"

Mrs. Bently laughed. "I cannot say that he seems much interested in them; he seems like a rather grim, silent young man, absorbed in his work and not particularly happy."

"Sho!" muttered the captain. "That sounds like he ought to be, but not how he useter be around here. He was just wild about my niece Sally."

"The pretty, black-eyed girl who lives with you?"

"Yes. Five years ago she was eighteen, and prettier than she is now—more color, and her eyes were happy. She was engaged to Robert Landis. They quarreled about something and he went off; she's that proud she never mentioned his name after that—only she's wishful and never so gay and happy as before."

"I am so sorry," murmured Mrs. Bently. "Is there anything I can do to bring them together? It is a delicate situation. But it seems dreadful that they should miss their chance for happiness."

"My theory is that there is some misunderstanding," commented the captain. "There they were, happy as clams at high water, having a postoffice in a hole in a hollow tree in the orchard. One day not so long ago I was coming across the orchard at dusk—and there was Sally, leaning against the old tree, crying as if her heart would break."

"Don't!" cried Mrs. Bently, taking out her handkerchief.

"There's the case!" said the captain gruffly. "Thank you, ma'am, for listening—good afternoon." He trudged up the beach with his fishing tackle and string of fish and disappeared through a hole in a broken fence.

"The poor little thing," murmured Mrs. Bently, thinking of Sally and her sad love story. "I believe I will go home for a week-end, and I will carry with me some snapshot pictures; one must be of that old orchard and the postoffice in the tree, and one must be of Sally at her prettiest; I must catch her secretly. And then some odd ones of the beach and other parts of the village, but those two will be mingled in and he cannot help but see them."

So Mrs. Bently spent one busy day with her camera, and then she took the train for the city. Captain Halliday missed her pleasant companionship on the beach, and went fishing every day. Sally sang about her housework in a soft, sad little voice, and sometimes her eyes wandered out to the old apple tree where there was a mossy hollow in the trunk—that was always empty now. A tangle of bushes had grown up around the old tree and amid the sharp thorns of brier a catbird had built her loosely constructed nest. Brown twigs, leaves, bits of grass, a scrap of old newspaper all helped to build the home for the hungry brood. They had flown away, and the parent birds still clung to the old nest, uttering their clever mimicry of other songsters or making that strange, mewing cry so like a cat. Sally liked the beautiful creatures, for they had returned to the same old nest year after year. How often she had seen them on her fruitless visits to the old trysting place!

That afternoon there came a terrific windstorm, and all the fishing boats hurried into port just before the storm burst in its fury. Captain Halliday was among the first to arrive, and he put up his boat and hurried home to help Sally close the heavy shutters and make the old house snug against the gale.

"We're in for a bit of windy weather, my dear," said the Captain as he sat down to a hot, savory supper.

"It is raining Uncle Peter; listen," said Sally, pouring out his tea.

There was the steady beat of rain on the roof, the chink of water running through the gutter pipes, the sound of thrashing trees.

They awoke the next morning to a sodden world of soaking land, fallen trees, and a beach strewn with driftwood from Wreckers island.

Captain Halliday went down to the beach to gather some of the driftwood for the winter fires, and Sally wandered through her ruined flower garden. There were cries of distress from the catbirds who were perched in the old apple tree. Sally found that their frail nest blown to the ground, but strongly tied to the thorn bushes was the bottom of the nest—of many nests, for each year the birds had reinforced the old home with new twigs, bits of string and paper. Now the ragged remains of the nest clung defiantly to the stems of the bush.

"You poor things!" sympathized Sally.

"Mew-w-w-w-w—" warned the birds as they flew away in a circle to return again. "Mew-w-w-w—"

Sally heeded the warning and turned. Someone was standing near by looking at her with an embarrassed smile. It was Robert!

"Sally," he said biting his lip, "I came back to ask you why you didn't answer my letter."

"Letter? What letter?" Sally was clearly amazed; her color rose and her eyes shone. "There was no letter here when you went away—nor since."

"Have you really looked for one, Sally?"

"Yes," she confessed.

"I left one three years ago—I asked you to marry me, and because I could not bear to have you say no, I told you not to reply if you didn't love me."

"I never received such a letter," quavered Sally.

"I put it in the hollow—and when I found no reply I went away without seeing you, dear."

Sally stood with downcast eyes and aching heart. How could she convince Robert that she had never received the letter? He was looking at Sally, then his gaze passed her and saw the remains of the old, old nest. There was something familiar sticking out of the sticks.

He rushed forward and pulled the sticks apart. From the bottom he pulled out a wet and torn envelope—it was thin and weather beaten—the ink was faded and pale—but the agitated catbirds who had appropriated the letter so long ago saw it pulled from the old nest, saw two young heads close together, reading the long-delayed letter, and saw the happy ending.

Corn as a Water Plant

Reveals Fertilizer Need

Mature corn growing on roots that had never touched soil was produced last year by scientists of the bureau of plant industry. The roots obtained the needed plant food from tanks containing nutrient solutions. This made it easy to change the nutrient solution at any stage of growth, something impossible with soil cultures.

This was not done as an effort at practical corn production, but to enable scientists to observe the effect on the corn of certain elements in various quantities or of the lack of them. Knowledge of the effects will add to information on corn culture, especially where commercial fertilizers are used.

The test showed that the proportions of fertilizer salts which may be used successfully vary widely. Too, it was found that there are certain elements which must be present in small quantities for good growth, but too much of these same elements may be toxic or poisonous.

Of the minor elements, iron was the most important and the hardest to control in water culture. If the solution was a little too alkaline the iron would precipitate as iron hydroxide. If the solution was acid it would precipitate as iron phosphate. Manganese and boron were other necessary elements needed in minute quantities. These were easy to apply, as they remained in solution.

Growing plants in water cultures is not new, although many previous experiments have been carried out on a small scale. Large galvanized tanks, holding 70 gallons of water, were used in the corn-growing test. The zinc coating of the galvanized tanks was covered with asphaltum so that the water would not dissolve some of the zinc. The plants were supported by hardware cloth, three meshes to the inch, fitted to a wood frame just above the water line. This allowed the roots to grow down into the nutrient solution. Plants grown in this manner were normal in all respects, although the yield was less than from corn grown under field conditions.

Many Garden Patents Issued

United States patents have been issued for more than 200 fruits, vegetables and flowers in the last two years, including a combination of the orange and lemon, a giant mango which can be shipped successfully; a white raspberry without thorns, an early variety of the York imperial apple and an improved freestone peach. The orange-lemon is described as a sort of citrus fruit shaped like a lemon, colored like an orange and tasting like both. Until recently the mango could not be placed on northern markets, due to the rapidity with which it deteriorated, but a horticulturist at Naples, Fla., has developed a variety resistant to decay which may be shipped. Its size, formerly that of a pear, has been increased to almost a foot in length and more than seven inches in diameter. In addition, it has a bearing period of three months, the first crop being harvested the middle of May. The improved York apple matures two to three weeks earlier than its parent, while the new freestone peach tree produces only marketable grade-A fruit.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—Many spineless officials of the federal government were shocked the other day when several hundred farmers took matters into their own hands and drove a bunch of sit-down strikers out of the great Hershey chocolate plants in Pennsylvania. They thought it was terrible that men who were striking for higher wages should be beaten and slugged as the farmers at Hershey, Pennsylvania, treated the sit-down strikers. The strikers had closed the chocolate plants, thus cutting off the daily market for thousands of gallons of milk.

Must Curb
Lewis

Fortunately for the country the number of these spineless creatures, charged with official responsibility, is very few. But I mention the fact because therein is a key to some of the things that have been happening in the Roosevelt administration's treatment of the labor disturbances.

I believe no one can support violence but there can be no doubt that the federal government is charged with responsibility for protecting rights. Rights are possessed by everyone under our Constitution and under our form of government and when a handful of individuals assume to disregard the rights of others it becomes something more than a situation about which soft words and tears for the down-trodden worker are required.

The importance of the action of the farmers at Hershey, Pennsylvania, cannot be minimized. It is a straw that points which way the wind blows. It means that unless the headlong and unrestrained actions of John L. Lewis and his labor agitators are curbed, sooner or later we will pay with blood; we will pay with lives of citizens because the American people always have insisted and always will insist upon a square deal.

In treating of conditions within the country, it is well always to avoid inflammatory declarations. I hope I am never guilty of unfairness in anything I write. But the cold fact is that, in this country, the time has arrived when government must make a choice between its functions as government and allowing autocracy of labor leaders to destroy the rights and property of the other millions of our population. Labor has its rights and they must be protected, but it is equally important that the rights of those who are not members of any union, who want to work, who own property, be protected. Thus far in the present labor controversy, it must be said that the Roosevelt administration and the governors of most of the states have fallen short in their sworn duty.

There has been much praise accorded Governor Murphy of Michigan for "settling" the strikes in the automobile plants. Yet, I cannot help wondering whether the term "settlement" is correct when strikers thumbed their noses at the courts and when law enforcement officers were told by their superiors to hold off the execution of court decrees. It seems to me that we, as a nation, will have cause to regret "settlements" of that kind for a good many years to come.

I am inclining to the belief that there is only one word capable of describing the attitude of the Roosevelt administration in dealing with strikers of the sit down character. Labor has a weapon in the strike and it is entitled to use that weapon because too many business interests have refused to be fair. But when labor abuses, instead of uses, the weapon available to it, then the time has come to call them to account just as business interests are called to account when they violate laws. The difference is that the ranks of labor involve millions of votes whereas, the ranks of business involve only a comparatively small number of votes. Therefore, by any line of reasoning I have been able to follow through, it seems to me that the federal government's position thus far can properly be described as political cowardice.

Political Cowardice

There are a number of reasons why I think this term is appropriate. First, there was the famous night conference when Mr. Roosevelt returned from his Georgia vacation and talked things over with the house and senate New Deal leaders. They emerged from that meeting with the President, saying that the federal government could do nothing; that no federal laws had been violated and that no request had come from any proper authority for federal government intervention.

It makes one laugh, such statements as these. If President Roosevelt and his administration had desired to curb sit down strikes, does anyone believe that he could not have conveyed word to Governor Murphy of Michigan that he was willing to help? I think there are plenty of grapevines by which word could have been sent to the Michigan governor and, I truly believe, that if there had been a request for federal troops, there would have been a distinct change in the attitude of Labor Leader Lewis almost overnight.

Further, I have heard from plenty of lawyers in the house and senate that the decision that no federal law was being violated was wholly questionable. Those lawyers were quite convinced that Mr. Roosevelt had federal statutes at his command to use as the basis for action in the various sit down strikes—if he seriously wanted to get mixed up in the labor row.

Then, I am reminded of the very frequent attacks which were forthcoming from the White House and other New Deal spokesmen when employers and banks and business generally failed to measure up to New Deal demands in the recovery programs. The President spoke with emphasis on those occasions. He has been completely silent in the current situation.

And he has been able to maintain silence through protection given him

Kept
Silent

by political maneuvering in the senate. As an instance of this, let me cite the efforts of Senator McNary of Oregon, the so-called Republican leader, in the senate, who attempted to put the question directly to the President. He sought, when the senate was floundering and dodging over a resolution condemning sit down strikes, to change the form of the resolution from one needing only concurrence of the house to a joint resolution which is a measure that requires the signature of the President. Majority Leader Robinson was quick to block that maneuvering. No one needs to tell you, of course, that Mr. Roosevelt did not want to have that resolution come to him.

So, as a second instance of federal government sissiness, we see a subservient majority of New Dealers adopting a resolution which said in effect, "You naughty boys! You know it is wrong to indulge in sit down strikes, to take possession of other people's property, and we are going to slap you on the wrist for it." Well, that was a declaration of policy but when the resolution was before the senate they could not resist the temptation to denounce business because they charged it was unfair to labor.

Then, we have another circumstance. Representative Dies, a Texas Democrat, proposed a resolution in the house for an investigation of sit down strikes. Mr. Dies was willing to condemn sit down strikes but he wanted to know what the facts were. Very quickly, many of the weak-kneed boys on the floor of the house smelled a thorough-going inquiry into labor organizations generally, into political activities of labor groups, into racketeering where local labor organizations are in the hands of irresponsible or scheming radicals. So, the house sneaked out from under and, as painlessly as possible, dodged this issue by depositing the Dies resolution on the table from which, of course, it will never be withdrawn.

I called these policies political cowardice in an earlier statement in this article. All of the elements seem to me to be present to justify that description. But there is another phase of the whole situation. It concerns the future of the politicians who have run away from the real issue this time. I am quite convinced it will rise up to hold them in the not too distant future.

In the course of the discussion of the labor controversy, I adverted on several occasions to the politics that is imbedded in the situation. There is so much of politics in the picture that one hears in the under current around Washington a discussion of President Roosevelt's future plans. It is curious, but it appears possible, that Mr. Roosevelt may be forced to run for a third term. Such a course obviously would break all precedents, but Mr. Roosevelt likes to break precedents.

Talk of Third Term

He has stated on several occasions his ambition to leave the White House in 1940 with the nation at peace and economically prosperous. This observation has been repeated whenever the opportunity was propitious. On the last occasion, there were a number of observers in Washington who sustained the same reaction to the declaration, namely, that perhaps—and only perhaps—Mr. Roosevelt had a yearning in his heart to serve another four years after his present term expires. One writer, noted for his direct expressions, observed that only by constantly referring to his future retirement could the President invite groups to interest themselves in demanding him to run for a third term.

New Hot-Water Bottles—Have a little glycerine added to the water with which hot-water bottles are filled for the first time. This will make the rubber supple, and the bottle will last longer.

Removing Stains on Hands—Vegetable stains can be removed from the hands by rubbing them with a slice of raw potato.

For Good Gravy—Did you know that gravy, to be served with roast meat, will taste much nicer and contain more nutriment if it is made with the water in which the vegetables have been boiled?

Preparing Salted Nuts—Here is an ideal manner in which to prepare your salted nuts at home: Take blanched nuts, salt and oil. Sprinkle nuts very lightly with oil, using not more than one teaspoon to one cup of nuts. Spread in one layer in a baking pan and brown delicately in a moderately hot oven—375 degrees—stirring occasionally that they may color evenly. Sprinkle with salt after removing from the oven, and spread on crumpled unglazed paper to absorb any surface oil.

Frying Eggs—Eggs are less liable to break or stick to the pan if a little flour is added to the frying fat.

Salmon in Rice Nests—Two cups of rich cream sauce, one egg yolk, two teaspoons lemon juice, one pound can salmon, one small can mushrooms, one cup rice, two hard cooked eggs. Beat egg yolks slightly and add to the hot cream sauce with the lemon juice. Add the salmon and the sliced mushrooms and heat thoroughly. Boil the rice, drain and form in mounds on plates; then make depression in mounds to form nests. Fill with salmon mixture. Cut hard cooked eggs in quarters lengthwise and garnish each serving with one.

Protecting Buttonholes—A row of machine-sewing around button holes in knit underwear prevents stretching and makes them last longer.

Shrink the Cord—When loose covers for chairs, etc., are being made, boil the piping cord before using. This little precaution prevents unsightly puckers after the cover is washed.
